this special publication fair is part of ima’s current exhibition, work-in-progress, which is the third installment of projects at ima and represents the culmination of committee work and collaborative projects from ima’s volume iii programming. the project started with the formation of the committee for curricular thinking and the development of a guiding document which served as the compass for collaborative projects that led to the creation of this exhibition. this exhibition reflects the fruitful outcome of thought-provoking discussions and collaborative endeavors with invited artists and educators. at its core, work-in-progress delves into innovative ways to re-imagine fine art curricula, emphasizing non-hierarchical, anti-racist and decolonized principles as inherent values rather than engines of marketing optics.

ABOUT IMA

intermission museum of art (ima) was founded in 2020 by rose van miero and john ros as a response to the growing fractures within our cultural, social, environmental, economic, and political systems during times of crisis. ima serves as a unique space for critical thinkers to engage with these moments of friction, transforming them into meaningful sites of production and fostering dialogues that culminate in a public archive.
